Dear Charlie

My apologies for the intrusion. I act [redacted]. Having received all approvals we are now (today) required to put out a [redacted]. I apologise for the rush and the interruption I didn't realise we would receive all approvals and information this week. Out of courtesy I attach the announcement and would be grateful if you could let me know if you have any comments. A 'no comments' text/email would be useful if you have no comments. Unfortunately given the timing requirements of the Stock Exchange rules I am going to have to release the announcement by close of play today.

I do apologise for the rush and hope that we can catch up in a more sedate manor later on in the month. I am currently complying an induction pack for you and will forward it as soon as everything is available.

Dear [redacted]

Thanks very much for the invite for the [redacted]

Unfortunately, due to current commitments in the diary, it is unl kely that Charlie will be able to attend at this short notice but I will leave in the background for now in case anything changes.

Have a great weekend both.
